Gain credit and work experience. An LFS Career Development Internship prepares you for your future career through a mentored learning experience with a food business or organization.

It's a foot in the door.
Get your hands dirty, learn from someone on the ground and contribute to the success of an organization working in the food system.

Choose the skills you need:
Choose from a range of opportunities on or off-campus, including community garden development, food literacy communication, sustainable food business practices, and more!

How to apply:
Watch for internship opportunities
Look for opportunities on the UBC Farm website and newsletter. Positions are posted in February, July, and November. UBC students from any Faculty may apply, there are no pre-requisites.

Submit an application
Submit your application, go through the interview process, and if selected, complete the course registration form. Internships start in May, September, and January.
